

THE COUCH THAT SAID GOOD NIGHT

Roméo, Janik, and little Taïs settle onto the couch for a cozy evening story.

But when Taïs mishears a simple French phrase, the living room transforms into a magical place where the couch itself might be trying to talk. A gentle tale of imagination, warmth, and the funny ways language can surprise us at bedtime.

Roméo

Janik

Taïs

LISTEN TO THE STORY ONLINE

Scan this code to play the story with dialogue, music and animated images.

NANOUSTUDIO®

BEDTIME

THE COUCH THAT SAID GOOD NIGHT

THE COUCH THAT SAID GOOD NIGHT

Evening falls, and three hearts gather on the couch.

Come here, you two. Let's sit together for a story.

I wanna be in the middle!

Okay, Taïs. You pick the book tonight.

The one about the sleepy animals!

Janik begins to read, and the room grows quieter still.

Once upon a time, a little duck said goodnight to the pond...

Wait. A duck? Like... canard?

Yes, sweetheart. A canard.

But you said canapé before. Is the couch a duck?

And then, a wild idea blooms in Taïs's imagination.

Maybe the couch is trying to quack at us!

Taïs, couches don't quack. They're just... soft.

But what if it wants to say good night, like the duck?

Well, let's listen carefully. Maybe it will.

Janik decides to play along, just a little.

You know, Taïs, maybe the couch does say good night in its own way.

Really? How?

It holds us close and keeps us warm. That's how.

Oh! So it's like a hug that doesn't talk!

And so, the couch holds them close as sleep arrives.

Good night, canapé. Good night, canard.

Good night, Taïs. Sweet dreams.

Sleep well, you two. The couch has you.

Words may mix, but warmth never does.

WHY DID TAÏS THINK THE COUCH WAS TALKING?

- A She heard a creaking sound
- B She confused two similar French words
- C Roméo played a trick on her
- D The lamp made shadows

Taïs mixed up canapé with canard, thinking the couch was a duck trying to say goodnight. A sweet linguistic twist!

B • She confused two similar French words

ANSWER

FIND A RED LADYBUG

